Blackbear Bosin (1921-1980)
Born to a Kiowa father and a Comanche mother on June 5, 1921, in Anadarko, Oklahoma. Blackbear Bosin became an internationally recognized artist.
He was named Blackbear - Ksate Kongia - after his great-grandfather, and was raised in a Comanche surrounding for the early years of his childhood. He attended St. Patrick's Mission schools, where he was first exposed to the traditional art of the Five Kiowa painters. (these were 5 paint He started painting then and never ceased until the day of his death, August 9, 1980. National Geographic gave Blackbear Bosin his first national recognition in March 1955, with the publication of his painting, "Prairie Fire."

Blackbear Bosin (1921-1980)
Born to a Kiowa father and a Comanche mother on June 5, 1921, in Anadarko, Oklahoma. Blackbear Bosin became an internationally recognized artist.
He was named Blackbear - Ksate Kongia - after his great-grandfather, and was raised in a Comanche surrounding for the early years of his childhood. He attended St. Patrick's Mission schools, where he was first exposed to the traditional art of the Five Kiowa painters. (these were 5 paint He started painting then and never ceased until the day of his death, August 9, 1980. National Geographic gave Blackbear Bosin his first national recognition in March 1955, with the publication of his painting, "Prairie Fire."

Blackbear Bosin (1921-1980)
Born to a Kiowa father and a Comanche mother on June 5, 1921, in Anadarko, Oklahoma. Blackbear Bosin became an internationally recognized artist.
He was named Blackbear - Ksate Kongia - after his great-grandfather, and was raised in a Comanche surrounding for the early years of his childhood. He attended St. Patrick's Mission schools, where he was first exposed to the traditional art of the Five Kiowa painters. (these were 5 paint He started painting then and never ceased until the day of his death, August 9, 1980. National Geographic gave Blackbear Bosin his first national recognition in March 1955, with the publication of his painting, "Prairie Fire."

Blackbear Bosin (1921-1980)
Born to a Kiowa father and a Comanche mother on June 5, 1921, in Anadarko, Oklahoma. Blackbear Bosin became an internationally recognized artist.
He was named Blackbear - Ksate Kongia - after his great-grandfather, and was raised in a Comanche surrounding for the early years of his childhood. He attended St. Patrick's Mission schools, where he was first exposed to the traditional art of the Five Kiowa painters. (these were 5 paint He started painting then and never ceased until the day of his death, August 9, 1980. National Geographic gave Blackbear Bosin his first national recognition in March 1955, with the publication of his painting, "Prairie Fire."

Blackbear Bosin (1921-1980)
Born to a Kiowa father and a Comanche mother on June 5, 1921, in Anadarko, Oklahoma. Blackbear Bosin became an internationally recognized artist.
He was named Blackbear - Ksate Kongia - after his great-grandfather, and was raised in a Comanche surrounding for the early years of his childhood. He attended St. Patrick's Mission schools, where he was first exposed to the traditional art of the Five Kiowa painters. (these were 5 paint He started painting then and never ceased until the day of his death, August 9, 1980. National Geographic gave Blackbear Bosin his first national recognition in March 1955, with the publication of his painting, "Prairie Fire."

Blackbear Bosin (1921-1980)
Born to a Kiowa father and a Comanche mother on June 5, 1921, in Anadarko, Oklahoma. Blackbear Bosin became an internationally recognized artist.
He was named Blackbear - Ksate Kongia - after his great-grandfather, and was raised in a Comanche surrounding for the early years of his childhood. He attended St. Patrick's Mission schools, where he was first exposed to the traditional art of the Five Kiowa painters. (these were 5 paint He started painting then and never ceased until the day of his death, August 9, 1980. National Geographic gave Blackbear Bosin his first national recognition in March 1955, with the publication of his painting, "Prairie Fire."

Blackbear Bosin (1921-1980)
Born to a Kiowa father and a Comanche mother on June 5, 1921, in Anadarko, Oklahoma. Blackbear Bosin became an internationally recognized artist.
He was named Blackbear - Ksate Kongia - after his great-grandfather, and was raised in a Comanche surrounding for the early years of his childhood. He attended St. Patrick's Mission schools, where he was first exposed to the traditional art of the Five Kiowa painters. (these were 5 paint He started painting then and never ceased until the day of his death, August 9, 1980. National Geographic gave Blackbear Bosin his first national recognition in March 1955, with the publication of his painting, "Prairie Fire."

Blackbear Bosin (1921-1980)
Born to a Kiowa father and a Comanche mother on June 5, 1921, in Anadarko, Oklahoma. Blackbear Bosin became an internationally recognized artist.
He was named Blackbear - Ksate Kongia - after his great-grandfather, and was raised in a Comanche surrounding for the early years of his childhood. He attended St. Patrick's Mission schools, where he was first exposed to the traditional art of the Five Kiowa painters. (these were 5 paint He started painting then and never ceased until the day of his death, August 9, 1980. National Geographic gave Blackbear Bosin his first national recognition in March 1955, with the publication of his painting, "Prairie Fire."

Blackbear Bosin (1921-1980)
Born to a Kiowa father and a Comanche mother on June 5, 1921, in Anadarko, Oklahoma. Blackbear Bosin became an internationally recognized artist.
He was named Blackbear - Ksate Kongia - after his great-grandfather, and was raised in a Comanche surrounding for the early years of his childhood. He attended St. Patrick's Mission schools, where he was first exposed to the traditional art of the Five Kiowa painters. (these were 5 paint He started painting then and never ceased until the day of his death, August 9, 1980. National Geographic gave Blackbear Bosin his first national recognition in March 1955, with the publication of his painting, "Prairie Fire."