

Claude Monet 1840 - 1926

IMPRESSIONISM

Claude did not like school very much. In grade school he started drawing funny pictures called caricatures of his teachers and classmates. Monet loved to paint his impressions of colors and textures in different light and often painted one thing again and again and again on different canvases at different times of day. The latter part of his life was devoted to paintings made in his water garden. Toward the end of his life his eyesight became poor, but he continued to paint until his death. He had painted 22 paintings of Water Lillies. In his life he painted almost 2000 paintings that sold for a lot of money.

Claude Monet 1840 - 1926

IMPRESSIONISM

Claude did not like school very much. In grade school he started drawing funny pictures called caricatures of his teachers and classmates. Monet loved to paint his impressions of colors and textures in different light and often painted one thing again and again and again on different canvases at different times of day. The latter part of his life was devoted to paintings made in his water garden. Toward the end of his life his eyesight became poor, but he continued to paint until his death. He had painted 22 paintings of Water Lillies. In his life he painted almost 2000 paintings that sold for a lot of money.

Claude Monet 1840 - 1926

IMPRESSIONISM

Claude did not like school very much. In grade school he started drawing funny pictures called caricatures of his teachers and classmates. Monet loved to paint his impressions of colors and textures in different light and often painted one thing again and again and again on different canvases at different times of day. The latter part of his life was devoted to paintings made in his water garden. Toward the end of his life his eyesight became poor, but he continued to paint until his death. He had painted 22 paintings of Water Lillies. In his life he painted almost 2000 paintings that sold for a lot of money.

Claude Monet 1840 - 1926

IMPRESSIONISM

Claude did not like school very much. In grade school he started drawing funny pictures called caricatures of his teachers and classmates. Monet loved to paint his impressions of colors and textures in different light and often painted one thing again and again and again on different canvases at different times of day. The latter part of his life was devoted to paintings made in his water garden. Toward the end of his life his eyesight became poor, but he continued to paint until his death. He had painted 22 paintings of Water Lillies. In his life he painted almost 2000 paintings that sold for a lot of money.