

Andy Warhol

1928-1987

Andy Warhol emerged as one of America's first Pop Artists. He painted people, places and things that Americans saw everyday. Things that were popular, like movie stars, food containers and pictures from the newspaper became his subjects. He believed by repeatedly painting something common or ordinary, people would stop and really observe the item.

This artwork was inspired by Warhol's "Marilyn" series.

Andy Warhol

1928-1987

Andy Warhol emerged as one of America's first Pop Artists. He painted people, places and things that Americans saw everyday. Things that were popular, like movie stars, food containers and pictures from the newspaper became his subjects. He believed by repeatedly painting something common or ordinary, people would stop and really observe the item.

This artwork was inspired by Warhol's "Marilyn" series.

Andy Warhol

1928-1987

Andy Warhol emerged as one of America's first Pop Artists. He painted people, places and things that Americans saw everyday. Things that were popular, like movie stars, food containers and pictures from the newspaper became his subjects. He believed by repeatedly painting something common or ordinary, people would stop and really observe the item.

This artwork was inspired by Warhol's "Marilyn" series.

Andy Warhol

1928-1987

Andy Warhol emerged as one of America's first Pop Artists. He painted people, places and things that Americans saw everyday. Things that were popular, like movie stars, food containers and pictures from the newspaper became his subjects. He believed by repeatedly painting something common or ordinary, people would stop and really observe the item.

This artwork was inspired by Warhol's "Marilyn" series.

Andy Warhol

1928-1987

Andy Warhol emerged as one of America's first Pop Artists. He painted people, places and things that Americans saw everyday. Things that were popular, like movie stars, food containers and pictures from the newspaper became his subjects. He believed by repeatedly painting something common or ordinary, people would stop and really observe the item.

This artwork was inspired by Warhol's "Marilyn" series.

Andy Warhol

1928-1987

Andy Warhol emerged as one of America's first Pop Artists. He painted people, places and things that Americans saw everyday. Things that were popular, like movie stars, food containers and pictures from the newspaper became his subjects. He believed by repeatedly painting something common or ordinary, people would stop and really observe the item.

This artwork was inspired by Warhol's "Marilyn" series.